Protecting your personal information is an important part of the Ringing Census. The Census has been designed in line with UK data protection legislation and recognised good practice for research. Information collected will be used only for the purposes of the Census and handled securely.

The results will normally be published in aggregated form. This means findings will be brought together across responses so that individual ringers cannot be identified from the published results.

Before the Census opens, please read the full Privacy Notice on the CCCBR Ringing Census page. It will explain what information is collected, how it is used and how it is protected. CCCBR Ringing Census 2026
